

I'm appealing to the FCC not to weaking Indiana's telephone privacy laws. Currently a group of banks is attempting to weaken those laws. If citizens can't use government to enforce their wishes then the role of the government is also weakening. I believe it is my right to keep people from calling me, especially unsolicited calls by large mega-companies that wish to abuse a single relationship with a small portion of their company so they can attempt to sell me products and services through the annoyance of telephone calls.

I also think it is important to stop interrupting what little family time American families get together in our fast paced society.
